Progress in healthcare means that there are many options to relieve symptoms and treat diseases. In some cases, one single approach seems obvious and the right decision to make. In other situations, however, there may be several options to choose from, including a variety of tests and treatments. Further, these tests and treatments may come with different potential benefits and harms, adding to the complexity of figuring out what is the best course of action. What might be helpful to consider in determining what the most appropriate decision for you might be? What is the role of health care professionals in this process? This lecture will discuss key ethics concepts and considerations that may assist you in making the best possible decisions related to your care.
